Another Story of Custer's Death.

The case of Sebastian Beck, whose career among the Sioux Indians was noted in this journal, has been fully investigated at the County Poor Office by Overseer McGonegal. During the recounting of his wanderings, the old man gave a reporter from this journal a clearer insight into the battle of the "Little Big Horn" than he before had. Beck, who had been a captive among the Sioux for eight years, participated in that battle. He recounted the details of the murderous charge uponCuster, in his broken English, in a manner that was interesting even to those who were famaliar with the slaughter of the gallant general and his band. He said that upon the night of the charge Sitting Bull expected Custer, and had massed all his forces and had a band of 3,000 warriors, of which he was one. The plan of their battle was as follows: The Indians fenced in a large corral with saplings, and within built fires. Upon the saplings they hung their blankets, and within they fixed billets of wood to represent themselves as scated about the fires. They then went into the mountains surrounding the spot and waited till Custer and his company should be attracted to the trap they had devised. They were successful, for the general saw the light, reconnoitred, and thought his chance had come. He opened fire upon the Indians. This was the signal. With one fell swoop 3,000 painted devils rushed down upon him from the mountain sides. In a moment the little band of 300 men were surrounded, and the unequal battle was commenced. Beck said that Custer at St. Mary's Hall, every Sunday evening. showed no fear, but rode into the fight with eyes and sabre flashing, and never raised it but that he left upon some redskin's face his bloody and ragged-edged trade mark "X," which so many of his victims in the late war knew so well. One by one his men fell around him, and at last he stood alone among them battling with his trusty sabre in his remaining right hand. But at last he too fell, pierced by seven shots. Beck said that his fight was terrible in its destructiveness. Fourteen of those indians who entered the fray paid for it with their lives, and their cold, copper-hued faces lay turned to the morning's sun next day, with 300 brave soldiers who followed the brave Custer into his last fight. This is the story of the old captive of the Sioux, who claims that he was there and saw that intrepid officer die. His last words were; "I am alone; I have done my best; the boys are all gone and I will go with them."—Rochester Demo-Children's and Boys Suits from $2.50 up H. STRAUSS, 66 King st.
